

MINA MUSEUM SETS “NEW HIGH BAR”

New exhibits set to wow

Culture Report
By SINIA WONG

The Mina Museum of Fine Art is set to reopen soon after two years of renovations. Floors have been expanded to house more exhibits, including the upcoming “Amulets to Ziggurats” project displaying relics from ancient despots throughout history. Curators are delighted: “We have several exhilarating and inspiring pieces to show to the public. We can’t wait!”

Odin Fingerstone, representative of the Masons, says he is proud of his workers. “Fine work, fine work. That museum will still stand proud for generations. Best marble sheeting in the world.”

A speaker for the Mina Estate suggests the museum will be ready for art connoisseurs, historians and the interested public in “a few short weeks”.

Public works meetings continue

Council news
By VALENCIA GALVAN

Discussions continue amongst the Apogee Council and the Guildmasters on future public works. Nadirans have been clamouring for another bridge south of the Bridge of Fraternity, while Feltminster locals have requested upgrades to the Anchorage Square paving. “Another bridge would be nice, but it is simply unsafe to bring a cart or carriage through Anchorage!” said one local.

Representatives have declined to comment, adding that “all requests will be considered but the Council has a fiduciary duty to all taxpayers to allocate funds where they are needed most”.

Current foot traffic across the Bridge has increased, following reluctance for river transport to operate at night due to rumours of piracy.

Goldmoss Students Win Again

Apogee’s own Goldmoss Gryphons quiz team have soundly defeated the visiting Everglades Erinyes for the fourth year in a row. Students are challenged to a gruelling three days of tests on history, mathematics, literature, alchemy and geography.

Team captain Labbu Vordahl commented: “Those elves from Everglades certainly gave us a challenge. But an extra sixty years of life doesn’t compare to weathering the crucible of Goldmoss exams. Better luck next year, Erinyes!”

The results of the sideline “magical manufacturing” competition have been challenged following allegations of wild magic. The Everglades representative has been said to have gambled with wild magic to win the competition, despite the violations of safety and fairness.

Farmers injured in fracas

A fight in Oxrip Park, Nadir, was broken up by members of the Apogee Guard earlier this week. The fight was alleged to be over a woman betrothed to both local wrestler Walla The Great and a guard recruit.

In the scuffle, four farmers were injured. Two have been sent to Fulcrum Asylum with spinal and psychic injuries.

The remaining farmers are in lockup with minor injuries. No court date has been set but Sergeant Olin Bordo says they should be processed soon.

Nadir tavern in receivership

The tavern once owned by Nadir local Lou Morlan is now under receivership. The previous owner died in a daylight invasion by gang members. Council law states the business goes to next-of-kin, but none could be found, thus reverting the property to the Council.

The gang members are still at large, and considered very dangerous.
